SEIP LEwant.-These of our residers who remember the fact that the Levant salled from Hills, in 1869, for Panama, will hardly credit the story of the person, as given below, who claims to be a survivor of the crew of that ill fated ship. The route from these Islands to Papama is so far to the eastward of any inhabited Pacific Island, that it is hardly possible that a single person could have drifted from the probable scene of the lies of the ship to any of them. It is also inprobable that a man should be obliged to stop for eleven years on any inhabited Island in this Ocean, without an opportunity to leave the Island or make his whereabouts known. Nearly every group of Lelands in the Pacific over wielded every year by Missionary and trading research. The Levant was probably last somewhere to the northeast of Hawaii, as a spar, which so doubt belonged to her, drifted ashere at Kashalu, Hawaii, and selife busy was found on the beach on Kauai which was also thought to have belonged to her. If, then, any of her unfortunate crew hall drifted ashere anywhere, it would probably have been un one of these Islands. The following is the
